EU High Representative Ashton co-chaired a ministerial conference on piracy and maritime security

Catherine Ashton, EU High Representative for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy visited South Africa on 6 October and Mauritius from 7-9 October to discuss strengthening strategic dialogue, deepening regional cooperation in the fight against piracy and contribution to international efforts for stability in Somalia.

The EU is committed to a regional approach to piracy off the coast of Somalia, based on ownership of the countries concerned and EU support for their efforts to ensure the prosecution and detention of suspected pirates. The EU is also committed to stability and security in Somalia and to responding to the needs of the Somali people.

During her visit to South Africa, HR Ashton met key government officials including President Jacob Zuma, the Foreign minister and the Defence minister. In particular, she discussed enhanced cooperation between South Africa and EUNAVFOR-Atalanta which has proven a major success since its launch in December 2008.

In Mauritius, HR Ashton co-chaired the second regional Ministerial conference on piracy following on from the first regional meeting on piracy held in the Seychelles in May 2010 which paved the way to the adoption of the regional counter-piracy strategy. Catherine Ashton said: "Piracy is one of the big challenges of our times both for the region and for the international community. It undermines maritime security in the Indian Ocean and stability and development in the region. The countries in the region have taken an active role in developing a regional approach based on three key elements - Somalia strategy, prosecution and detention of pirates and maritime governance. The long term solution of course lies on land and on development and a lasting political solution in Somalia." During the conference in Mauritius, the HR reiterated the EU's full support for this strategy and the action plan developed by the countries in the region and regional organisations. The HR also held bilateral meetings with the President and Prime minister of Mauritius and foreign ministers from other countries in the region who were present in Mauritius.
