

EUROPEAN SECURITY DIRECTORY 2010

The 3rd edition of the European Security Directory, published in May 2010, is currently available in our Paris office.

The European Security Directory, built on our success and experience since 1985, represents a unique structured tool for useful contacts. We have done our best to provide our readers with most up-to-date and accurate information. Accurate, because all the entries are supplied by the companies and organisations themselves. You know the importance of up-to-date information in a strategic and technological sector which is security: changes are continuous and not always easy to keep track of. This is especially true in Europe due to the diversity and sometimes to the lack of visibility of its industrial and institutional actors and structures.

European industries and research organisations have already produced an important preparatory collaborative effort towards building a true Technological and Industrial Base (TIB). However, it is still today very delicate both for industrial and research organisations and for Public Authorities to rapidly and properly identify potential partners, new comers, innovative actors. European Security Directory is the new key initiative in this matter.

To find and to be found is the major proposal of this directory.

The overall layout of the directory is structured in five major sections (as listed below) giving a variety of information on the Security Industry and Research Centres in Europe. The continuous support of European institutions, major organisations and various ministries of EU countries, aims at advocating for the reconnaissance of the European Security Directory as a reference in security area.

If your company does not yet feature with a profile entry in the Directory, please contact us. You may be sure to get all the necessary information for an entry in the next edition.

We look forward to receiving your order for your copy(-ies) of the European Security Directory 2010.

May the European Security Directory 2010 be your useful companion throughout this year.
